Calais Captured by France

Mary I's marriage to Philip of Spain who inherited the Spanish crown in 1556 drew England into the Habsburg orbit. One of Philip's objects in marrying Mary was to encircle France, and in 1557 he gained his end when England joined in his war against France. In England the chief result of this war was the loss of CALAIS, a military base on the continent.

and a prosperous town that was the center of England's lucrative export trade in wool. The town, which had been in English possession since 1347, was captured by the French, under François de Lorraine, Duke of Guise in 1558, England thus lost its last foothold on the continent of Europe.
